

New

Handling difficult conversations and how to say no (politely)

www.thequietachievr.com

2 questions to think about...

1. Think about difficult conversation you had that:
 - you chose not to say anything (but wish you did); or
 - had room to improve.
2. Think about a time when you said yes (but thought no). What happened? What was the result?

why are difficult conversations so hard for us?

1. it's a number's game!

number's game

- As introverts, social interactions drain our energy. No. of interactions: low
- Extroverts gain energy with social interactions. No. of interactions: high
- Getting good at handling difficult conversations simply takes practice.

difficult conversations

Scenarios

- Giving hard feedback
- Saying no (politely)

New

hard truths about giving feedback

www.thequietachievr.com

Most people are terrible at giving feedback

What usually happens:

- Wishy-washy - unclear
- Shit sandwich - good, bad, good
- Feels personal, criticising the person
- Keep quiet and don't say anything;
"oh if it happens again..."

New

~~feedback is a gift~~

feedback is information

giving hard feedback

Feedback scenarios:

- Peer
- Superior
- Direct report / subordinate

saying no (politely)

What usually happens:

- We think “career-limiting move”
- We say Yes (even tho we think No)

Impact:

- Feel like a push-over
- Regret “why didn’t I speak up”
- Resentment - yourself, the person

No is a complete sentence

2nd strategy:

role play

who you are is a flexible thing

“wearing multiple hats” and adopting behaviours of that role can motivate you to do things you couldn’t before

New

Handling difficult conversations and how to say no (politely)

www.thequietachievr.com